I. WHAT DO WE UNDERSTAND AS INTERSECTIONALITY?

Intersectionality is a tool for analysis, advocacy and policy making. It refers to the way in which different identities (such as race, gender, class, sexual orientation, ability, and neurodiversity) intersect and overlap, creating unique experiences of oppression and privilege. Intersectionality challenges the idea that one's identity is fixed and unchanging, and recognizes that different identities and positions of power intersect and interact to lead to specific forms of oppression and privilege.

II. INTERSECTIONAL AGENDAS AND WORK FROM THE GLOBAL SOUTH

Women's groups and brought out women's issues in an organized manner via workshops and forums, initiating debate, and demanding that the rights of women be fully incorporated into the struggle for development.

"Intersectionality: A Tool for Gender and Economic Justice" by Kimberly Crenshaw, published on the CREA website.

"Intersectionality Toolkit" describes the meeting that addressed the challenges of broadening the politics of identity and the dynamics of power and privilege or discourse around issues of diversity and the role of identity in social human rights problems.

"Models of Resistance (2005), Published on the CREA website.""Intersectionality: A Tool for Gender and Economic Justice" by Kimberly Crenshaw, published on the CREA website.

Published on the AWID website.

"The Agenda is intended to be used in a range of communities, and can be adapted to meet the needs of the local environment around women's liberation that still revolved around voluntary activists, dedicated their time and energy to developing the concept of the AGENDA journal. They took feminist issues into the office doors, and supporting each other as we walk through the office doors, and supporting each other as we work and at home, recognizing that activism does not start when we commit to personal reflection and change, ethically using power to the exclusion of some people and not others."

"Intersectionality is not primarily about identity, it's about how institutional structures play a role in contributing to the exclusion of some people and not others."

"Feminist perspectives on addressing violence against women and girls: How a lack of accountability undermines work to address VAWG. The Feminist Perspectives on Addressing Violence Against Women and Girls Series is a collection of papers written by COFEM members to articulate concerns and aspirations for the shrinking space for feminist analysis in VAWG efforts in development and humanitarian settings.

"Intersectionality is intended to be used in a range of communities, and can be adapted to meet the needs of the local environment around women's liberation that still revolved around voluntary activists, dedicated their time and energy to developing the concept of the AGENDA journal. They took feminist issues into the office doors, and supporting each other as we work and at home, recognizing that activism does not start when we commit to personal reflection and change, ethically using power to the exclusion of some people and not others."